A PRINCELY ITALIAN WEDDING.

The Presents and the Bride's Trousseau.

Anne Brewster, in a letter to the Philadelphia Bulletin, thus discourses of the Torlonia-Borghese wedding:

Before dismissing the Torlonia-Borghese marriage, about which Rome—high, low, rich and poor—have not yet stopped talking, I must mention Prince Torlonia's gift to the poor on the occasion. He sent to the fifty-two curates of the fifty-two parishes of Rome a thousand francs each; making in all, of course, fifty-two thousand francs—over $10,000—to be distributed among the poor. His check to the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, at St. Onoifria—a lady who is in authority tells me—was for 200,000 francs, instead of 50,000 francs, as I said in my last letter. The establishment of St. Onofria, Lungara, Rome, directed by the Sisters of St. Vincent, is the most interesting one. It was established and endowed munificently by the first Torlonia, father of the present Prince. It is a hospital for the blind, and a place of refuge for poor old men and women. I have often gone through it when I have been visiting the Sisters, and have always been impressed with the cleanliness and cheerfulness of the place. The old people are as gay and chirrupy as crickets; their spotless, clean rooms look out on a beautiful garden, and the Sisters are kind and good to them. There is also a charity school for girls.

The banking house of Spada & Flaminia, successors to the Torlonia Bank, presented the young bride with a beautiful Castellani silver and gold crown. The Duchess of Cer's wardrobe wedding gown, ball dresses, and street costumes, thirty-eight in number, were exhibited at the rooms of Madame Cortonesi, No. 180 Corso. The wedding gown was the traditional white satin, with exquisite point. It is said that the young Duchess has put it aside, intending, whenever she dies, to be buried in it. May she live long enough for the wedding dress to fall in pieces, and have so many happy years as to forget her sad girlish fancy. In youth great joy runs beside sad thoughts. When the young Duchess arrives at pleasant mid age, as I pray the pretty bride may, she'll smile at her planning her shroud out of her wedding gown. The wedding veil is said to have cost 50,000 francs.

Every toilet is accomplished by two pairs of shoes or boots, and a costly fan and handkerchief, if it is an evening dress. The walking costumes have each bonnets and hats to match and umbrellas or parasols. Some gowns are trimmed with feathers, some with martin fur, silver fox, ermine, etc., and others with beautiful lace, manufactured especially at Brussels. Then there are opera cloaks, for every caprice; ermine and sable martin, mantles, etc. The colors for the evening toilet are white (which, of course, we women know is no color, but we chose to call it one,) Marie Louise rose, and pea green. Some of the street costumes are trimmed with rich velvet. The dressing gown and boudoir toilets are delicious. With the exception of the laces, everything is of Italian make. Stefanucci made the ball slippers of various colored satins; Jasi, the beautiful little satin and kid boots; Zeffrino Cesarino, the furrier of Rome, fashioned the rich and costly ermine and other fur mantles. Cortonesi told me she had been four months preparing this large wardrobe, and she had twenty workmen employed on it all the time.

Revolt in the Green Room.

From the Boston Post.

The Parisian actresses are in a state of mutiny, and on a subject near the heart, not only of actresses in particular, but of the gentler sex in general. It is not that they are striking for higher salaries, though to such a consummation they are doubtless not wholly indifferent. It is not that they are jealous, a but too prevailing weakness of their craft; nor is it because the parts in which the inexorable manager casts them are inadequate to their genius, or inferior to those of their fair but detested rivals. It is upon the mighty subject of dress that they have excited themselves to the pitch of shrill rebellion; and, strange to say, it is rather to protest against excess of dress than to bewail the want of it. Here is Mlle. Fargeuil, long a favorite of the Parisian boards, who used to play with Fecther before he migrated, and whose fame rests mainly, perhaps, upon the splendor of her toilettes and the various magnificence of her attire, but who now pleads that the stage is becoming a show window for the fashions, instead of a mirrior held up to nature; and vigorously protests, with an army of Ophelias, Camilles and Belle Helenes at her back, against a degration of the imitatory art to exhibitions of Eau de Nil, "Ladies' Gordon," and Marie de Medicis tabliers. Yet time was not long ago, when M'lle Fargeuil dressed so sumptuously, that, if what she spent on one evening's toilette were prudently invested, it would have provided her with a cosy income for the rest of her days; when the lace about her graceful person at a single performance cost over two thousand dollars. M'lle Fargeuil is evidently tired of being a model upon whom to hang milliners' draperies, and to display the last extravagance from Worth's; and so boldly declares against the despotism of fashion, and for a return to tinsel and cotton velvet. The habit of excessive dress on the Parisan stage, where the Cleopatras must wear real crowns, mock pearls are sternly tabooed and spangles are contemptuously banished, has done much, say the fair rebels, to demoralize and degrade the stage; but Paris has not enjoyed a monopoly of this extravagance. Stories quite as large as that of Mlle. Fargeuil are told of the famous actresses in London and New York; the world has heard of "first ladies" whose gloves and boots exhausted their salaries, of "stars" who became bankrupt by the magnitude of their milliner's bill, even of sombrettes, who, half starved themselves for the sake of dainty costly pitticoats and jauntily ruinous head coiffures.

The ladies of the Paris stage are inclined to seize the advantage which the Republic gives them. The custom of gorgeous dresses arose under the lavish and ostentatious Empire, when the actresses of the Theater Francais and the Vaudeville were wont to act at Compiegne and Vich, before Napoleon and his dazzling Court; when the Chamberlain summarily banished acretses who dared to appear in imitation pearls, and the sleek courtiers used to invade the green rooms to distribute bon bons and whisper pretty compliments. Now, however, all this is changed. The simplicity of the drama should return with the simplicity of the Republic. There is no Chamberlain to wave a wand of dismissal; there are no courtiers to scan the figure, or to turn up their noses at spankles and brass coronets. Akin to the extravagance in dress which distinguished the drama under the Empire, was the rage for scenic sensations and sulphurous stage effects; this is assailed by the courageous dames of the green-room revolt. They appeal pathetically to the beauties of Moliere, the romances of Dumas, the thrilling melodrama of Hugo, the photographic portrayals of society by Dumas the younger and Sardon; why should the stage become a show-case for jeweler and modiste, when it possesses such gems as these to display? Such a revolt as this cannot be regarded with indifference; for our own stage is sensitive to that of the world's metropolis of fashion, and if the degree goes forth to eschew the concentration of a fortune upon the back and head, and return boldly to the pasteboard and glass jewelry which Siddons did not disdain, in which Forrest thundered, Rachel raved and Garrick laughed, the revolution would soon sweep over American theatres as with a tidal wave.

THE GREELEY STATUE.—Mr. England, of the New York Sun, has abandoned his purpose of raising a Greeley statue, and offers a return of the money to subscribers. The character and respectability of the committee of gentlemen from the several States who have in charge the proposal to erect a statue to Mr. Greeley is regarded by the press in New York as a guaranty of the success of the work.

"I'm a self-made man," said a native of Stonington the other day to a New York gentleman, with whom he had been driving a sharp bargain. "Glad to hear you say so," responded the New Yorker, who had been worsted in the trade, "for it relieves the Lord of a great responsibility."

Mr. Norwood on the Great Western Canal Question.

The following letter, which we find in the Rome Commercial, written to one of Rome's citizens, will be read with pleasure, as showing the views of Senator Norwood on the canal question now pending at Washington:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 10, 1872.

DEAR SIR—Yours of the 6th inst., enclosing proceedings of a meeting of the citizens of Rome, Ga., on the subject of opening the Coosa river and constructing the Atlantic and Great Western Canal, is received.

I can only say at present that I will use every effort I can to accomplish both works. As to the prospect of securing aid for either enterprise at an early day I can say nothing now. I think, however, an appropriation for the Coosa during this season is not improbable. The other enterprise is vast, and will be scrutinized closely and long, I apprehend, before the general government will take hold of it. I believe its accomplishment is a fixed fact, though uncertain as to time. It is gaining favor daily.

Your friend,
T. M. NORWOOD.

The Old Chief Justice.

When Judge Marshall lived in Richmond, his opposite neighbor was Colonel Pickett, father of the Confederate General George E. Pickett, of Gettysburg fame. Colonel Pickett was a man of wealth, lived well, and was not content unless everything about his household bore the marks of good living. His horses were his pride, and were conspicuous everywhere for their splendid appearance, being as sleek, fat and high-spirited as abundant food and excellent grooming could make them.

Judge Marshall's horses, on the other hand, were notoriously lean and unkept. Everybody but the Judge had long remarked this. At last it was brought to his notice, with the suggestion that his carriage driver neglected the horses, sold much of their food, and appropriated the money to his own use, a good deal of it going, no doubt, for liquor. The Judge called him up without delay.

"Dick, what is the reason Col. Pickett's horses are in such splendid condition, while mine are almost skeletons? I am afraid you neglect them, don't half curry them, and don't half feed them."

Dick, not expecting the attack, was fairly posed. He hemmed and hawed awhile, till he could gather his negro wits about him, and then said:

"Mars John, look at you; is you fat?"

"No, said the Judge; "decidedly not."

"Well, look at ole Miss (Mrs. Marshall;) is she fat?"

"No."

"Den look at me; is I fat?"

"No."

"Den look at yo' horses—is dey fat?"

"No."

"Now, den, you jes' look at Kunnel Pickett—he fat, his car'ige driver fat, his horses fat, his dog fat—all fat. De troof is, Mars John, fat rnn in de Pickett family, and it don't run our'n. Dat's all."

"Well," said the Judge, after a little reflection, "there's a good deal in that. It never occurred to me before."

He turned back into his study, and Dick was never troubled any more.

THE ROSTER OF THE NEXT HOUSE.—Mr. McPherson, the Clerk of the House, has prepared so far as possible at this time the roster of the next House of Representatives. The full membership will be 292. The Democrats or opposition must have therefore ninety-eight votes to break to two-third majority of the Republicans. Thus far the Democrats have eighty-nine votes, and New Hampshire and Connecticut have yet to elect their members. The relative strength here given does not also include the members from Florida, Louisiana or West Virginia, these being subject to future decision. There is a prospect that five, or, at most, six Democrats may be added, making in all ninety-five, or three less than a third of the membership.

IMPORTANT AMENDMENT PROPOSED.—P. M. B. Young, of Georgia, failed in his effort today to present to the House an amendment to the resolution under which the Credit Mobilier Committee is now acting. He has a preamble prepared which recites the fact of the formation of the Credit Mobilier, and that the former resolution is not brodd enough, inasmuch as it is limited to the bribery of members and does not cover the inquiry as to the frauds of that organization on the government. His resolution enlarges the scope of his inquiry in this particular and directs that a full history of the company be reported, and that the committee shall hereafter sit with open doors, and that any citizen may be present at their sittings.

DEATH OF THE SENIOR PROPRIETOR OF THE ENQUIRER.—Mr. Thomas Ragland, senior proprietor of the Columbus Enquirer, died at his residence, in Wynnton, Tuesday night, of bilious colic. He was in his eighty-first year. We believe he became connected with the Enquirer about twenty-five years ago. His death was quite unexpected, as he had been on the streets the day before seemingly in his usual health. By birth, he was a North Carolinian. A good man and useful citizen has gone to his reward.—Sun and Times.

TWELVE INSTEAD OF FOUR.—Is the report of the vote in the House last Monday, on the concurrent resolution against removing from the army regimental colors the names of the battles of the rebellion; it was stated that only four Democrats voted for the resolution. There were twelve Democrats who voted for it, viz: Bell, Hibbard, Parker of New Hampshire, Getz, Griffith, McClelland, Speer of Pennsylvania, Holman of Madison, Indiana; Rogers, Tuthill and Slater.

THE ERIE SETTLEMENT.

NEW YORK, December 20.—The settlement by Jay Gould with the Erie Company was the main topic of conversation throughout the city last night. It is everywhere regarded as a grand triumph for Erie. The proposal for settlement was communicated in a letter by Jay Gould, addressed to President Sabon of the Erie Ring, on December 17th.

He stated that since his resignation of the presidency he had been prepared to make conveyance to the company of the property belonging to it which he held in his name, but to which he says he never made any claim. During his administration he made various purchases of property belonging to it which he held in his name but to which he says he never made any claim. During his administration he made various purchases of property for the company with monies of his own, the benefit of which accrued to him. Upon the construction placed by Mr. Watson on his accounts, he was charged with all these money, and he believed the properties in question belonged to him, and if they were now transferred, he should be credited with their value. Owing to the state in which he was compelled to leave his accounts on his withdrawal from the company, and the loss of his account book, some things remained unexplained.

The various pieces of real estate in dispute therefore, he proposed to convey to the company, and, in addition, the Grand Opera House and adjacent properties owned by himself and Fisk. I do this, he says, for the sake of peace. Mr. Watson thereupon replied that he considered this a fair offer, and would at once lay the subject before a special committee.

Gould made the following statement to a reporter yesterday: Since the Erie war my object has been to obtain a series of roads under practically one management from New York to San Francisco, and in this way obtain a fair share of all traffic on the intervening route, and that which accrues at either terminus.

Gould's object seems now to be to enhance the price of Erie stock to the end that he may be measureably reimbursed.

Looking at the Best Side:

Doctor Johnson used to say that the habit of looking at the best side of things was worth more than a thousand pounds a year, And not only is this radiant good-natured riches, but it is the most active charity. All other riches must be hoarded, more or less. Our horses, our houses, our pictures, our jewels, our books, in the most generous hands can gladden but a few friends. But our heartsome good-nature brightens every human soul it meets, and is reflected from each to some other. There is no end to its influence any more than to sunshine. And as it is lavished it grows sweeter and fuller. It is the beautiful secret of which all the old stories are allegories. It is the clue that opened the hard labyrinth of life, the spell that tamed savage beasts, the mysterious fountain that conferred perennial beauty, the sweet-smelling apple that contained the spirit of health, the magic glass wherein all things looked fair, the blossom, eating of which all care vanished.

The best of it is that this blossom will grow in the barren soil of the grumpiest spirit, and multiply exceedingly if it be nourished a little at the start. But those who wear it ever are crowned therewith, and, above all the sons of men, they are the children of light.—Hearth and Home.

Sterling's Southern Series

Readers, Orators & Copy Books.

THE undersigned now own the plates of this POPULAR SERIES; and as they are the only Purely Southern School Books offered in the market, we submit that it is to the interest of Teachers to patronize them. Send for circulars of Special Terms to Teachers—VERY LIBERAL. Specimen copies sent free for examination.

Prof. Orr, the Superintendent of Education for Georgia, says of them:

Messrs. J. W. Burke & Co., Macon, Ga.—GENTLEMEN: I have given to the Sterling Series of School Books, which you have had the kindness to leave with me, such examination as the limited amount of leisure at my command has allowed. With several books of the series I was already familiar, having added greatly to the interest of several public exhibitions, while engaged in active school work, by selections from their pages. While there ought not to be anything offensively sectional in our school literature, I must be allowed to say that it is with feelings of both pleasure and pride that I find in the pages of these books so liberal a recognition of Southern talent. I am glad, too, to learn that their publication is to be transferred to our own State. Southern independence will be soonest achieved by producing, as far as possible, every necessary for the supply of all our wants, both material and mental, upon our own soil. I will only add that I would be pleased to see the books extensively used.

Respectfully yours,
GUSTAVUS J. ORR,
State School Commissioner.

"SPERM LUBRICATOR."

E. H. KELLOGG, of No. 17 Cedar street, New York, is manufacturing an oil extensively known among dealers and consumers as his "SPERM LUBRICATOR," which has been thoroughly tested on all classes of machinery, and while it is not inferior to pure sperm in lubricating qualities, endurance of cold, freedom from gum or odor; costs only about two-thirds the price, and such to have long been the most tenacious advocates of Sperm oil only, who are induced to give the trial, almost universally adopt it instead.

ATLANTA:

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1872.

Notice.

We have but one General Traveling Agent—Col Thomas M. Acton.

Acquitted.

Captain Scott Thomas, charged with the burning of the court house at Lawrenceville, Georgia, was tried a few days ago and acquitted.

To-Day.

The Christmas number of the above has just been issued by Messrs. Maclean, Stoddart & Co., Publishers, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Cincinnati, with Dio Lewis, editor. It is filled with choice stories, interesting sketches, delightful humor, and spicy material.

American Farmer's Advocate.

This journal has been a consistent advocate of co-operation among farmers, and espouses regularly the National Agricultural Congress. It presents all the benefits of the Congress, which holds its next meeting in May in Indianapolis, Ind., and which promises to be an occasion of much interest to agriculturists.

The information in reference to it may be obtained by addressing the Secretary, C. W. Greene, at Jackson, Tenn.

☞ Mr. Thomas Ragland, the senior proprietor of the Columbus Enquirer, died suddenly of bilious colic at half past three o'clock Thursday morning, after a few hours illness. He was in perfect health at his business the day before. He was born in Raleigh, North Carolina, October 4, 1798, and was, therefore 74 years old. He moved to Georgia early in life. He was connected with a Milledgeville newspaper for a while. In 1842 he took an interest in the Columbus Enquirer, with which he was connected ever since. Thirty years is a long time to be identified with an institution. He married a Miss Sarah Day.

He was an amiable, good, sensible gentleman and leaves a large family and a good name behind him.

Durell Drunk.

The man Durell, in New Orleans, who is Judge of the Federal Court, and who has become so suddenly noted and infamous by reason of his prostituting his office to Radical partisan schemes, receives from one of the New Orleans papers a curious illustration of character.

His signature in 1863, to his oath of allegiance to the Confederate States, and his signature to his infamous order overthrowing the State Government of Louisiana recently to put a Radical State administration in power, are given in fac simile, and attention drawn to the contrast.

The former is in clear well-cut lines and shows a cool head and steady nerves. The latter is marked by tottering strokes and crazy blots showing in its drunk and reeling dashes the besotted debauched condition of the man.

The paper says the signatures represent the moral and physical condition of the man at the time of writing.

Northern Butchery.

We ask pardon of our readers for transferring to our columns the article in another column headed as above, graphically describing a street fight in New York city between two wealthy men, that is engrossing much interest there.

We reproduce it to call attention to a certain inconsistency of some of our Northern brethren on the matter of settlement of personal difficulties. We see constantly in the Northern press every species of sarcastic and censuring comment over the Southern resort to the code and the duel, which, at least, bad as it is, has the merit of referring disputes to cool, honorable, dispassionate friends under a system of ethics that enjoins an attempt at peaceable settlement as a necessary preliminary to hostile meetings, that if they take place, do so on perfect equality between the parties, and relieved from the brutality and disorder of street encounters.

Let any impartial reader peruse the horrible butchery detailed as occurring in that land too holy for duelling between wealthy and educated citizens, and ask, if bad as the duelling code is, it is not better than such brutal murder in settlement of private quarrels. And further, would it not be well to cease the arraignment of Southern civilization for the stain of duelling, until a better substitute can be offered than is presented in the sickening affair alluded to.

Evil as the duel is it has one good object when it seeks to prevent such butcheries as the one mentioned, which are too common in Northern society, and which the journalist recording owns to be getting common because unpunished.

Let us hope that religion and law will bring Southern society to that condition where love and charity and justice shall prevent any resort to violence.

Longstreet.

Noticing the fact that General Longstreet, who fought through the war on the Confederate side, has been placed in command of the State militia by the bogus Legislature of Louisiana, the Pittsburg Post says "he appears ready and willing to do any dirty work that may be allotted to him."

It must ever remain a strange thing that men like Longstreet, who have shown the possession of fine qualities, should develop a phase of character so inconsistent with such qualities. Longstreet was a noble and successful soldier, brave, faithful, able and chivalric. Amid many bright spirits he won a commanding pre-eminence. The war left him with an unusually brilliant lustre.

His course since has been strangely variant with his character as a Confederate General. He stood true to his section in her danger and battles. In her subsequent degradation and ruin he turned against her, and made money out of his subserviency to her oppressors. Perhaps this might have been charitably judged on the idea of his judgment compelling him to accept what was for the best. But events have confirmed the darker construction to which his conduct was liable.

He joined the Liberal movement at first and supported Greeley. With characteristic pliancy and readiness, he deserted the cause he thought to be failing, and voted for Grant. And recently he has identified himself with the disgraceful and successful Radical attempt to overthrow the Louisana State government, and has even blatantly offered to lead Federal bayonets to the slaughter of Louisiana citizens.

His infamy is about as complete as it is inexpressible. And the spectacle of his shame carries with it pain and regret to every Southern soldier.

☞ The Savannah Irishmen have addressed the following letter to Father Burke, the eloquent and successful opponent of Mr. Froude, the famous English historian, in the noted controversy in New York as to the condition of Ireland.

We indorse it all, and hope to see Father Burke in the South and in Atlanta:

Savannah, Ga., December 17, 1872.

Reverend Father: The Irishmen, and the descendants of Irishmen, in Savannah, call upon you from the Sunny South. Your name is engraven on their hearts, and your fame and your influence is now recognized as world-spread as that of St. Patrick or O'Connell. With the missionary qualifications, the sanctity, and the untiring perseverance of the one, and disinterested ardor of the other, well may we claim for you the attributes of those two immortal names. Although a thousand miles separate us your words have reached our hearts, and the burning eloquence of your tongue has stirred up feelings of patriotism and religion that languished for support. Your unequalled career of popular success has brought your mission glorious fruits.

It has checked the ravages of sin, the vice of intemperance, and created union amongst Irishmen. It has excited patriotic feelings, and revived national hopes.

It has strengthened the character and sustained the status of Irishmen throughout the length and breadth of this immense continent.

It has penetrated the hearts of the most profligate.

It has extricated those who had fallen into the slough of indifference, and animated the lifeless, and strengthened the feeble and wavering in the good resolution they had formed for the future. With this record before you, with these gladdening results of an inspired mission, and the certainty of adding to your laurels, you cannot refuse the invitation of the Irishmen of Savannah to deliver the oration on St. Patrick's day. As the defender of our country and our name, as the champion of our faith and our honor, we ask you to gladden our hearts on that day—or any other, should a pre-engagement prevent you—when we will engage to give you a royal Irish ceade mille failthe.

Continue, reverend father, your noble, patriotic and charitable course. The eloquence of the immortal Grattan, the glowing genius of Shiel, the patriotic enthusiasm of O'Connell, the dignity of the illustrious Doyle, the undaunted vigor of the lion of the Fold of Judah are yours, use them for the sake of truth, the spread of temperance, the glory of religion and the regeneration of poor old Ireland.

Bret Harte.

The author of the "Heathen Chinee," is a gentleman of about five feet nine inches in height, with distinguished dark face, dark side whiskers, dark hair sloping down on his forehead, a large, flowing and silky black mustache, and attired in exceptionable evening dress, a white tie, having gold studs in his shirt bosom and a watch chain depending from his vest pocket.

As a specimen of Mr. Harte's style of anecdote, one might be given in which he illustrated the droll humor of the real Westerner. A lady from the East was shocked at the profanity of a miner who happened to be near her, whereupon her male cousin, who had been in the mines for several years, remarked, "Ho, you call that swearin'? Well-l, you oughter hear Bill Jones exhort that impenitent mule of his'n." At one point in the lecture, when Mr. Harte alluded to "What you call the heathen Chinee," the audience applauded loud and long.

The lecturer illustrated the manners of the Argonauts by a story of Mr. John Oakhurst, raised in a Puritan land and fostered by Puritan parents with Puritan principles and transplanted to California in the Hegira of the "roughs." He had been taught that cards were sinful from early youth. One day he sat down to a game of faro, and as he rose, the winner of $5,000, he leaned over the table and looking around at the large assemblage in the gambling saloon, he said, in his characteristic way, "And some people think that keerds is a waste of time!"

The subject of Lynch law was next dwelt upon, and as an instance of the uncompromising manner in which it was carried out the lecturer related an anecdote of a jury who hesitated so long when trying a man for horse stealing that the crowd became impatient, and the ringleader, putting his head in at the door, asked them if they had agreed upon their virdict. "No," replied the foreman sharply. "Well, gentlemen," said the man, "take your own time, but remember we want this room to lay out the corpse in."

Death of Mr. Edward A. Pollard.

We announce with unfeigned regret the death of Mr. Edward A. Pollard, which mournful event transpired at the residence of his brother, Mr. Richard Pollard, on Court street, in this city, yesterday afternoon at 2½ o'clock. Mr. Pollard had long been a great sufferer, and his disease (Bright's disease of the kidneys) in this case, as in all others we believe, baffled the skill of the best medical men of the country.

We have not the data at command to make more than a brief mention of Mr. Pollard's life. He was born, we believe, in Nelson county, Va., and was educated at the University of Virginia. Leaving this venerable institution about the year 1851, the deceased located in San Francisco, Cal., with the view of practicing law, for which profession he had thoroughly qualified himself. But he soon became a contributor to the press on the Pacific coast, and finally abandoned law and entered the field of journalism. Returning to Virginia about 1857, Mr. Pollard devoted himself to literature, for which he had decided taste as well as gifts. During a portion of the war he was engaged as an editorial writer on the Richmond Examiner. After the war his time was occupied for months in the preparation of a history of the war, which had a large sale.

About two years ago Mr. Pollard's health became so feeble as to render him an almost hopeless invalid, and he became a resident of Lynchburg, finding a welcome home with his brother. About this time he made a profession of religion, and connected himself with the Court-Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, and it will be a pleasure to his friends to know that he died in the triumphs of Christian faith.

During his painful illness he received the unremitting attention of relatives and friends. One of his last requests was "Bury me at Oak Ridge beside my brother," referring to the late H. Rives Pollard. In compliance with this request, his remains will be taken to Oak Ridge on Wednesday next, to rest under the old oaks he loved so well.

Mr. Pollard was in his fortieth year, and unmarried.

Leggy.—A New York critic, apropos of the new play of "Leo and Lotos" at Niblo's in that city, discourseth after this highly improper fashion:

> We read in Proverb that the Lord delighteth not in the legs of a man; to which we may add that the devil certainly seems to take pleasure in those of a woman, and that in no play that we have ever seen in this Satanic object of enjoyment made greater use of than in "Leo and Lotos." There were vernal legs, and autumnal legs, and summer legs, and legs that seemed to have the wings of the morning; and legs affluent with the girth and resiliency of nature, and legs rounded with the smooth paddings of art—legs which a sculptor might have Pygmalionized, and by which the worshipper might have felt happy to be kicked.

Fashionable Explorers.—Circumnavigation of the globe seems just now to be all the fashion with the English aristocracy. Within the last few weeks the Marquis of Stafford, the son of the Duke of Sutherland, Earl Grosvenor, the son of the Marquis of Westminster, and Viscount Lewisham, the son of the Earl of Dartmouth have left London under the charge of Dr. Franklin Geun, to make a tour to India, China and America. Speaking of the scions of the English aristocracy remind us of the statement of the London papers that the Duke of Edinburg has declined the rank of admirable on the ground of his not being fit for it. This is a rare instance for modesty on the part of the royal youth, and should make him popular among the old tars of the navy.

☞ Shakspeare depicted human nature a skill that has never been surpassed, and even in our day we find counterparts to the characters he drew more than three hundred years ago. He must certainly have had an eye on the White House when he painted in the Merchant of Venice the following picture:

"There are a sort of men whose visages
Do cream and mantle, like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit,
As who should say, I am Sir Oracle,
And, when I ope my lips, let no dog bark!
O, my Antonio, I do know of these,
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing; when I am very sure,
If they should speak, would almost damn those ears,
Which, hearing them, would call their brothers fools."

From the Atlantic Monthly for December.

* * * * * * The election of Grant is therefore the choice of the lesser evil. It is not an unqualified indorsement of his conduct, nor a declaration of popular contentment with the present status for another four years. On the contrary, his re-election liberates a reform sentiment which was repressed by the necessities of the election contest. The sense of having been placed at a disadvantage before the enemy by the shortcomings of the Administration will give the reform demand an energy it did not have before. The wounds of the battle will give an unwonted sharpness to criticism in the Administration party. Whatever load the supporters of the President have had to carry in the fight will now be freely cast upon him, and his conduct will be subjected to a severity of judgement which will be something new to our party experiences.

* * * * * * * *

There is in the Republican party, not excepting even those public men who seem to be personal adherents of Grant, a wide-spread feeling of discontent with him, and among all the thinking classes a feeling that we need an elevation of the character of the administration. The removal of the outer pressure of the election battle will liberate this feeling, and give it a rebounding energy of expression which it will be necessary for the President to heed, and which it would be wise in him to anticipate by giving signs that he is alive to the public sensibilities. It is necessary that free public journals which desire the success of the administration should speak plainly on these matters, for the Japanese Mikado is not more completely cut off from all hearing of unfavorable opinion of his conduct, on the part of his personal supporters than is President Grant. The power which a President possesses, and the fact that through his patronage he holds the political fate of every Administration Congressman in his hand, would, to a great extent, prevent any President from hearing the truth from those about him; but it is well known that this evil is increased by the disposition of President Grant, which inclines him to regard with aversion any who speak to him of fault of conduct.

It was unfortunate that Grant came into office with the conspicuous gifts of citizens to the successful General who in the line of precedents was the coming President. When he showed an inclination to call the givers to high places in the government, it gave the opposition a weapon against him. When he took a share in the high gifts that citizens were contributing to General Sherman, and in his eagerness involved himself in the scandal with Major Bowen, he compromised his personal dignity, and exhibited qualities unbecoming to his station.

It is not a great draft upon the public purse, nor a creation of dangerous family influence, when the President appoints a dozen or more of his relations to office; but it is a bad example and shows a low view of the Presidential office. But far worse than this was the scandal of a President's brother-in law at the capital, following the profession of agent for claims against the government, carrying his family influence into the subordinate executive departments where such claims are judged, and actually—as he testified before a Congressional Committee—appealing cases from the Departments of the President, and appearing before him to argue them. In effect this was the sale of the President's influence against the ends of justice by his brother-in-law.

The summer absences of the President from the capital are matters of no great moment in the affairs of the government, and his frequent junketing excursions could be excused for his proclivity for a pecular kind of entertainers who bring him and the Presidential office into disrepute and expose him to be made the instrument of designs upon the government.

When the gold conspiracy to make a private speculation at the cost of widespread ruin of the innocent burst upon the public on the memorable Black Friday, the public mind was shocked by the intelligence that the President had been caught in the toils of the conspirators, and had been made to do their bidding by writing a letter to Secretary Boutwell advising him against increasing his sale of gold. The effect was not mitigated by the fact that the conspiritars had tangled the President's family in the plot. The public party excused him with the charitable plea that he was deceived by the sharpers Gould and Fisk; but there was a general feeling that the President of the United States should not have made companions of men so notorious as public robbers, nor received hospitality and other favors from them.

The American people do not fear that the President's surrounding himself with military attendants means a design to subvert the government, but jealousy of military surroundings and manners belongs to free institutions and the spirit of free peoples, and the disregard of this shows a lack of perception of popular sentiment, or a contempt for it.

It is true that Congress is laggard and reluctant in the work of civil service reform; but the President has not the trammels that bind Congressmen. He can wield a prevailing influence in promoting the needed legislation. He can put the methods of reform into practice, by retaining and promoting capacity, fidelity and experience, and by refusing to remove any capable and faithful officer to make place for a partisan retainer, without waiting for legislation. But while he asks of Congress legislation to coerce him to reform the mode of appointments to the civil service, he presents to the country such a scandal as the New York custom-house, with its disreputable official service and its unofficial levies upon the merchants, regulated by his own hand.

It is true that when the President caused our case to be presented to the Geneva Tribunal with our consequential injuries extended to the close of the war, he went no further than the speech of Mr. Sumner and the almost unanimous vote of the Senate and the general acceptance of the country, and that his late competitor went beyond this with a wild proposition that our claims should be made the ground for demanding the cession of Canada; but it cannot be forgotten that between these events the President's ostensible reason for the peremptory dismissal of Mr. Motley was that he stated to the British Minister the case of our injuries too strongly, although it came far short of the case presented at Geneva. The Republican party did not seek a statesman for President when it chose General Grant, for it could not have expected a statesman in him. It chose him because the glory reflected on him in the popular view by the military triumph gave him a political availability which would be useful, and which, if not secured by it, might be turned against it. It would therefore be unreasonable to demand of him a positive and leading policy of statesmanship. But it had the right to expect from him an example of duty, dignity, regard for law, and a high self-respect which would have a beneficent influence on the other branches of government and on the whole executive service. Yet there is a common impression that Gen. Grant takes a low view of the Presidential office; that he looks upon it as a personal affair; that he makes a balculation of what is due him from the value of the office he gave up to take this; and that he regards it as a reward of merit.

All these things and others have made the labor of the recent contest much greater to the administration party than it would have been with any Republican of fair standing, without an administration record, for a candidate. The election having given to Gen. Grant another term of office, this feeling in his party should have free expression. His friends cannot do him a greater service than to subject his conduct at every step to severe judgment. At the best he will have a difficult part to play. Whether he shall show an amenability to intelligent public sentiment and shall rise above the personal view of the Presidency, will govern the event whether he shall continue to have the support of a successful party, and shall leave it in control of the country when he retires to private life, or whether his re-election shall precipitate a disintegration of the Republican party, which will make his administration helpless, and leave him to terminate his official career followed by the reproaches of the party that elected him, and with none to do him honor.

NORTHERN BUTCHERY!

"For Mercy's Sake, Don't Kill Me!"

A Terrible Gash—A Knife That Did its Work Well—An Instant Murder in New York.

Zack E. Simmons keeps a policy shop at No 67 Liberty street. He has a magnificent country seat in Port Richmond, Staten Island, and lives like a prince. Champagne, fast horses, diamond pins, suppers at Delmonico's—he has all the good things of this earth. Some three or four months ago he was in partnership with Nicholas W. Duryea, another wealthy policy dealer. They frequently quarreled. Simmons thought that Duryea was getting most of the profit, and Duryea thought that Simmons was not treating him fairly. After many quarrels they dissolved partnership, and Duryea went to Brooklyn, where he opened a policy shop at No. 5 Boerum street.

Duryea prospered in his business and whenever he met his former partner told him that he was glad he had left him, as he was making much more money now. Simmons told Duryea never to speak to him again, but Duryea laughed at his threats. They were bitter enemies now. Last night they met in front of Simmons' office, 67 Liberty street. They had some angry words. "You are a thief," Simmons said.

"Don't you call me a thief," muttered Duryea, with an oath.

"I will call you a thief," Simmons said with an obscene oath.

At this Duryea struck Simmons. They clinched and rolled into the gutter. Simmons, who was the more powerful man, seemed to have the advantage, and Duryea tried in vain to free himself from the grasp of his adversary.

"G— d— you," he said, "let me up."

"You'll die first," Simmons said, giving him a tremendous blow.

The blood gushed from Duryea's eyes and nose and trickled down his cheeks.

"For mercy's sake, let me up," he cried.

"Go to hell!" was Simmons' answer, and he gave Duryea another blow. The blood covered Duryea's face and streamed over his collar and his shirt.

"For mercy's sake," he cried, trying to ward off the blow, "don't kill me!"

"Kill you!" Simmons exclaimed, in a fearful paroxysm of rage. "I'd kill you a dozen times if I could."

Duryea succeeded in raising himself a little. He seized Simmons by the throat and attempted to choke him. Simmons gasped for breath. His face was livid, and it seemed now as if Duryea was to have the best of it after all. He tried to free his neck, but could not.

"G— d— you!" he gasped; "I'll kill you!"

And he put his hand into his pocket and drew forth a knife. It flashed in the air, and in the next moment was buried in Duryea's neck.

"Oh! oh!" Duryea cried, as his head sank back, bathed in blood.

Again the knife flashed in the air, and again it descended. What a terrible gash! It was right behind the left ear. The arteries had been cut—there was no hope for Duryea. The knife had done its work well. As Simmons raised it the second time Duryea raised his hands. It was too late. The knife descended and Duryea writhed in an agony of pain; his head sank back, the blood rushed over his whole body, then a few painful convulsions of the limbs, and then it was all over—he was dead!

"By J——, he's dead!" Simmons said coolly, and he drew the reeking knife out of the dead man's neck.

He looked at the knife complacently and said, "By G——, I thought I'd do it once, and I'm glad I've done it now!"

The blood was all over his face, all over his body. He put the knife in his pocket and calmly surveyed the corpse. What a ghastly spectacle! The head, behind the left ear, looked as if it had been cut to pieces, and the features, covered with blood as they were, bore a terrible expression of agony. The dead man looked as though he were suffering yet in his death.

Officer Webber, of the second precinct, arrested Simmons.

"Give me the knife," the officer said.

"All right," Simmons replied, in a gruff tone; "you can have it now. I don't want it any more."

He was taken to the police station in Beekman street, and there he complained that he had broken his leg. It seems that he fell into the gutter after having murdered Duyea and sustained slight injuries. He was removed to the Park Hospital.

He was very reticent and refused to say anything in regard to the murder. He was apparently very cool and acted as if nothing had happened. He is an intelligent man and knew that hanging was played out in New York.

Delaware's Barbarism.—There was a grand flaggellation at Newcastle, Delaware, last Saturday. Seven colored culprits and one white do. were pilloried and whipped. The way in which the prisoners endured their tortures is elaborately described in the Wilmington Commercial. In one case "the flesh quivered and the tears flowed freely." Another victim took his punishment "without a groan." A third "showed no sign of pain except a slight jerking of the muscles." A mulatto, after sixty lashes, which he bore without shrinking, though the blood flowed freely, striking his heels together and saying, "I told you I was the man to stand it." Finally came John Caldwell, "an honest, intelligent white man, respectable in appearance," who stood one hour in the pillory, and then took 20 lashes with the utmost sang froid. For him, being white, the largest sympathy was expressed by the crowd. How long does Delaware propose to keep up this sort of thing, to the discredit and disgust of the whole nation?

☞ One morning during the late war an officer riding through the woods of north Alabama was attracted by a tall, lank countryman, who seemed to be using his best endeavors to reach the top of a hickory tree. Scarcely had he reached the summit when, rapidly descending, he started up another tree a few yards further off. This strange proceeding was repeated at least a dozen times, the countryman climbing and descending one tree after another for nearly a quarter of a mile. The officer, at length overtaking him, inquired the cause of his eccentric operations. "Wal, stranger," he answered, "I was lyin' asleep under yon hickory, when a darned squirrel dropped a shell-bark into my eye. I'm going to worry him till he leaves the settlement if I die in the attempt."—Exchange.

☞ It is estimated that there are at least ten thousand drummers, as they are usually called, employed in the United States, and that they are maintained at an annual expense of $50,000,000, including salaries and traveling and hotel expenses. This is a heavy tax upon our domestic commerce, and the interests at stake in the movement are far greater than might be at first supposed.

☞ Gen. George B. McClellan is numbered by the San Francisco Chronicle among the unfortunates in New York who added their quota to the $3,000,000, or thereabouts, lavished upon the so-called diamond fields of Arizona. The General accepts the situation philosophically, but declines to say anything regarding it.

☞ If Mr. Colfax consents to take the editorship, it will be on the condition of perfect freedom to act according to his judgment and his convictions. On any other terms his editorship would be a deception, and a serious mistake. It seems, therefore, that Mr. Colfax's terms are absolute editorial control.

Statue to Thaddeus Stevens.—The Pennsylvania Republican Association here have decided to erect a statue to the memory of Thaddeus Stevens, and have appointed a committee to raise twenty thousand dollars for that purpose.

☞ Southey was accustomed to take in the substance of a book in turning over continuously, glancing down the pages.

☞ A reasonable and natural conjecture concerning the new Cabinet of President Grant puts the Hon. Charles Francis Adams in the Department of State.

The Windsor and Eaton have flooded the river Trent and its affluents. The Loire and Dorwent have overflowed their banks, submerging a large portion of the country in Leicester and Nottingham. In some sections of these counties only the tops of trees and hedges are visible. Heavy land slips have occurred near Dover, and railway communication with that town is interrupted. The town of Peterborough in Northampton county, is flooded, and many of the residents have been compelled to take refuge from the water in the upper stories of their dwellings. A dispatch from Liverpool says that 449 persons, including passengers and sailors, have perished by marine disasters during the past ten days. Agents for the Company,

ATLANTA. GEORGIA.

THIS GUANO has been in extensive use for seven years in Georgia and adjoining States. Experience demonstrates that 200 pounds per acre increases the crop from double to three-fold the natural yield, thus making one hand equal to two, and one acre equal to two.

The policy of the Pacific Guano Company is to sell a fertilizer unsurpassed for excellence at the lowest price and look to large sales and small profits for reasonable returns on capital invested, hence this valuable Guano is put into market at the present low price to consumers.

Planters are requested to put in their orders early to insure prompt delivery.

I certify that the subjoined is that part of the report of the Judges at the late Fair, relating to the premiums awarded the Singer Sewing Machine:

No. 846, Best Family Machine: Premium awarded to Singer Sewing Machine.

No. 847, Best Manufacturing Machine: Premium awarded to Singer Sewing Machine.

M. JOHNSTON, Ass't Sec'ty.

From the above official document, the public will see who states the fact, Mr. Wilde, of the "Domestic," or myself, as to what Sewing Machine took the premium at the Georgia State Fair.

R. T. SMILLIE.

dec 1-1m

MR. SMILIE may have bored the officers of the Georgia State Agricultural Association out of a certificate of some kind in favor of the sewing machine he represents, but the report of the committee, as found below, shows the facts of the case:

FAIR GROUNDS GEORGIA AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION, November 19, 1872.—Colonel H. D. Capers, Superintendant Fine Arts Department: * * The Domestic, as a family machine, is the best.

[Signed] J. C. PECK,
W. H. OSTLER,
EDWARD PARSONS.

I dislike very much to call the veracity of any one in question, and will give Mr. Smillie the credit of believing what he claims. He has repeated it so often, I really believe he thinks it is true that he was awarded something.

It is due Mr. Johnston to state that I do not desire to question his veracity in the card published above, as I have always found him gentlemanly and polite. It was by his courtesy that I made the copy of the official report as published above, of the only Committee who examined the construction of Sewing Machines.

SUPPER AND AUCTION SALES.—Despite the weather the room next to Jack's confectionery was densely thronged last night. The room presented a magnificent spectacle. The tables were adorned with everything useful. The Youths' Working Society of the Second Baptist Church deserve their title. They are a working society. The refreshment tables groaned beneath the weight of luxuries and substantials. The table presided over by Mrs R M Farrar, Mrs J D Pope, Misses Sparlock and Miss Harris was liberally patronized. It was a real treat to eat there just to be honored with such handsome waiters.

The post-office, Jacob's well, Oriental Queen and other departments were attractive features Judge Hammock, with his benignant face, was the auctioneer. He disposed of articles quite lively. Let all remember to be on hand to night. There will be lots of fun and many beautiful things to be seen.

ATLANTA PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Closing Exercises for the Year at the Grammar Schools

The closing exercises of the Grammar Schools came off yesterday at the several schools, and at one o'clock the scholars and teachers left to return no more until the sixth of January 1873.

The Grammar Schools each comprise eight grades, or classes, corresponding to the first eight years of the child's school life, or from the age of six to fourteen.

In these schools are taught spelling, reading, writing, geography, mental and written arithmetic, elements of natural science, English grammar, vocal music, drawing, history and elocution.

The streets and sidewalks in the city were in a slushy condition and the weather inclement. This cut off the attendance of pupils and visitors.

There were registered in attendance on the White Grammar Schools during the first years 887 males and 893 females, and in the colored 375 males and 392 females. The inclement weather for several weeks has thinned out the pupils, yet we have never seen children exhibit more enthusiasm and delight at the privilege of going to school.

The cost of educating 1,200 children at private schools was $48,000—an average of $10; the cost of educating 2 482 scholars at the Public Schools is $46,832 50—an average of $16 25.

Owing to the condition of the streets and the weather, it was a difficult matter to report all the schools yesterday. We begin with

IVY STREET SCHOOL.

Captain W M Bray is Principal, and Mrs Josephine Ballard first Assistant of this school. They are in immediate charge of the first and second grades, which comprise the more advanced pupils in the school. The exercises in this hall, consisted in the examination of the classes in Arithmetic, Grammar, Reading, etc., with declamation by the boys, and a series of compositions by the young ladies. In the examination the pupils gave evidence of good training and careful attention by the preceptors, and showed by the ease and readiness of their answers, a clear understanding of the branches inculcated.

Miss Sallie Mathews read an interesting composition on "Christmas;" Miss Lizzie Norris, on "Obedience;" Miss Mary [illegible] chose "Books" for her subject, and [illegible] well; Miss Kate Sessions rubbed out [illegible] Boy;" Miss Lizzie Mathews' subject was "[illegible]" Miss Camilla Read read an interesting description of "Christmas in Germany," and Minnie Knight, "Under the Holly Bough." The compositions were carefully prepared and well read by the young ladies.

Among the number of boys whom we heard speak, mention is made of Luther Hunnicutt, who delivered "Cataline's Defiance" in a splendid manner; George Downs did well in "Spartacus to the Gladiators;" Willie Leyden in the "Sailor Boy's Dream," and Arthur Peck in "Bernardo Del Carpio," delivered here old yet touching poems in a feeling manner

In the third grade hall, presided over by Miss H. S Young, the pupils evinced a thorough knowledge of the different studies taught them. Their proficiency was perhaps as gratifying to the teachers as to the parents and friends of the scholars. Considerable anxiety was evinced by the pupils that difficult questions should be asked them. Where all did so well, it is difficult to make exception, but A. L Ansley, Katie Bleckley, Geo. Wallace and A. D. Forescre, are specially mentioned. Gussy Forescre in his declamation of the "Seminole's Defiance," seemed infused with the vengeful feelings of the bitter, taunting words of the savage. He shows marked oratorical powers.

In the fourth grade, in charge of Miss Smillie, the examination was very good. A recitation by Miss Mollie Mathews was very fine. Victor Moore's effort was decidedly the best in the hall. Charles Jennings and Chas. Morris were credited with the best map drawings. The highest reports for the term in this Hall, were won by Samuel Weil, James Eddleman and Annie Murphy.

Mrs. H. M. Colquitt has charge of the fifth grade hall, and from the deep interest which she evidently bears to her pupils, they cannot fail to learn. The chalk drawings of her little scholars on the blackboard show marks of genius and taste, and were well executed. The classes recited well, and the declamations by the boys were very good. The dialogue between Ralph Guest and W Ezzard—"Alexander and the Robber"—was well delivered. The prettiest scene of all was the rendition of Tennyson's "May Queen," by Misses Annie Barrett, Ada Kener and Lelia Lowry. Miss Mamie Glover recited Dickens' poem "Dismissing School," for the closing address, in a clear, distinct and graceful manner. Mrs. Colquitt may well be proud of her charge.

Mrs. Bessent has charge of the sixth grade hall, in which the exercises were very interesting. Our stay in this hall was too limited to give a full description of the examination.

In the seventh grade, under the supervision of Mrs. C. P. Sams, the children did well. Their examination showed remarkable advancement for children of their age. Sanford Gay, Tommy Peeples, Logan Bleckley and J. Ben Wylie were perfect in everything called for, yet they were equalled by Lucy Moore, Alice Johnson and Flora Gunst. A little speech by J. Ben Wylie—"Children Heard When Seen"—was well delivered, and Lily Walker recited "Planted Cause Me Want to Grow" in a sweet manner. The little song, "The Angels are Coming for Me, Mother," was very sweet.

Miss Sallie Duggan has charge of the tiny little fellows in the 8th grade. She showed us specimens of their childish efforts in writing, spelling, etc., which were very good indeed. Little Eddie Powell, and H. Garlington evince fine talent, and Hattie Walker Annie Gamble and Rosa Wiseberg, are almost prodigees in their childish acquirements.

The exercises were an honor to the industrious teachers. The children and parents are congratulated on the progress made under their direction.

The map sketches, demonstrating the geographical information of the pupils, are quite interesting features in these schools, and must have a beneficial effect.

WALKER STREET SCHOOL.

This is the largest Grammar school in the city, numbering four hundred students. Even the large, commodious and elegant school building is not large enough to accommodate all the students; and in this emergency another small building has been constructed on the premises, which is occupied by about fifty students.

The school is under the care and instruction of the following efficient corps of teachers:

Mr. O. Rockwell, Principal, who has charge of the First and Second Grades of boys, with 27 students; Mrs R J McKeon, First and Second Grades of girls, 35 students; Miss L A Field, Third Grade, mixed; Miss T H Ellis, Fourth Grade, mixed, 41 students; Miss L W Robarts, Fifth Grade, mixed, 45 students; Miss A M Brown, Sixth Grade, mixed, 50 students; Miss N E Sallas, Seventh Grade, mixed 47 students; Miss Mary Fraser, Eighth Grade, mixed, 49 students; Miss M J Brown, Eighth Grade, second division, mixed, 52 students.

In drawing exercises on the black board we note those deserving special mention; A Locomotive, a Lion and an Ostrich, by E W Reinhardt; a Drug Mortar and Pitcher, by Henry Sanders: Flower Vase, by T R Wootten: A Scroll, by Charles Barnwell; House and Scenery, by C M Crankshaw; Plants, etc., by M Brown; Tool Box, by W P McCrary.

In Mrs McKeon's department, (girls of first and second grades) there were some specimens of drawing worthy of mention: Map drawings, by Mary Osborne, Anna Bennett, Maggie Crankshaw, Amanda Rauschenburg and Mary Blanchard. Fancy sketches, by Julia Rosenbaum and Emma Reed; Bud, by Louis Maier; Flower, by Dora Castleberry.

In the Third Grade (Miss L A Field) were some very superior drawings by Horace Bradley and Fred Bender. A Castle and Dog by the former were remarkably well executed.

On the walls of these rooms were suspended numerous specimens of map-drawing by the students. They are all drawn in colors, and many of them are executed with marvelous neatness and accuracy from memory alone.

Mr Rockwell's reading classes were excellent. Mrs. McKeon's girls analyzed and parsed English sentences with alacrity and understanding. Miss Fields' classes discoursed history most readily. Miss Ellis' arithmetic and geography classes indicated that they thoroughly understood the rudiments and principles of the one, and the thousand facts and relations of the latter. Miss Robarts' students executed the varied maneuvres of the calisthenic exercises promptly. Miss Brown's little charges recited and declaimed well. Miss Sallas' classes read and spelled in a manner highly creditable, as did also Mrs. Brown's and and Mrs. Fraser's classes of boys and girls, whose average age is between six and seven years, covered the blackboards with most superior specimens of penmanship and drawing, considering their tender age.

THE CLOSING EXERCISES

in the first and second grades consisted in recitations and compositions by the girls and declamations by the boys. A number of the girls, whose names we did not learn, produced some very good compositions, which gave evidence of tasteful and judicious training, and evinced at the same time considerable research and a degree of familiarity with history that is creditable to girls of their age. Mrs. McKeon may justly be proud of some of her students. Among them was one German girl who is now in the first grade, after having studied the English language only six months.

The declamation by some of the boys were delivered with much grace and spirit. The two boys, Julius Menko and Jacob Menko, show remarkable talents as declaimers, and speak with equal ease in German and English. Bernardo del Carpio, by Julius Menko, and "The Maniac," by Jacob Menko, were declaimed with wonderful ability. C Harmsen declaimed "The Earl King" in German.

During these exercises an interesting episode occurred—a sort of rival contest between one of Mr Rockwell's boys and one of Mrs McKeon's girls, to show their superior knowledge of Geography. At the suggestion of Mr. Rockwell, one of the boys approached a physical map of the United States, (bearing no names of places or rivers whatever,) and with the most ready familiarity, pointed out and named every river in the United States, about one hundred and eleven in all.

Thereupon Mrs McKeon called up one of the girls, who with the same readiness named over and located all the Capitals of Europe, and named all the rivers, giving their source and outlet.

Singing and drawing, generally neglected in common schools, here receives the greatest attention; and has already developed some remarkable talent. At the conclusion of the exercises the school joined in singing, every student beating time, and singing in perfect concord The combined effect of 150 or 200 voices joined in some sprightly air, was truly thrilling.

Every student in school uses his or her pen or pencil either in drawing or writing Those too young to write are employed at times in copying in imitation of printed letters, and even in the Eighth Grade there are classes of drawing. In Mrs. Brown's division of this grade, we saw some drawings of animals and scenery by a boy seven years of age, that was very meritorious.

During the day the school was visited by Mr. Superintendent Mallon and Mr. David Mayer, both members of the Board of Education, who expressed themselves highly pleased with the exercises.

The students joined in a lively chorus, bade their teachers farewell, and ran home happy with anticipations of the delights of Christmas holidays.

CREW STREET SCHOOL.

The average attendance at the Crew Street School has been only about 350 during the last few weeks.

The Principal, Mr. John Isham, is a superior teacher and knows how to make the boys do, and do it well. Miss E A Heath has charge of the Second Grade; Miss M J George of the Third; Miss M F Andrews of the Fourth; Miss M L Wood of the Fifth; Miss E M Lamboo of the Sixth; Miss S F Johnson of the Seventh, and Miss S A Williams of the Eighth.

The pupils in each grade demonstrated yesterday very forcibly the power and influence of method. The pupils understand the principles and philosophy of the subject taught, and can demonstrate their knowledge on the blackboard or otherwise.

Take, for instance, the lowest grade—the little A, B, C fellows. They soon learn to print their lessons with the pencil, and so stamp in ineffaceable characters on their minds the knowledge thus acquired. They retain all they learn.

The boys in the 1st grade read and declaimed finely; their map drawing, too, was most excellent. In every branch they illustrated the fidelity of their principal. Some of the compositions were original and unique.

In the second grade the girls exhibited remarkable progress. We specially note the fine map drawing of Miss Luella Kidd and Miss Allie McPherson.

The singing was charming.

Mr Mallon, Superintendent, and Hon David Mayer made a few remarks appropos to the occasion.

The pupils in the third grade presented their teacher Miss M J George, with a handsome book of "Poems," a tribute well bestowed upon a faithful and efficient teacher.

DECATUR STREET SCHOOL.

This is as yet a small school, but the efficiency of its teachers and the development of the pupils do not partake of a small character. Joel Mabel is the Principal, assisted by Mrs. S. F. Neeley, Mrs. V. A Witcher and Miss Kate L. Winn.

The exercises yesterday were like all the other schools exceedingly interesting, and peculiarly gratifying. Great care and pains have been taken with the pupils of this school; and larger schools will have to look out for their laurels.

LUCKIE STREET SCHOOL.

This is a splendid school though we can not say the same of the building. The appointments of the school are most excellent, but the rooms are deficient. Such a fine corps of teachers ought to have a more convenient and suitable house. Prof. H. H. Smith, the Principal, is one of the best teachers in the South. His assistants Mrs. S. V. Prather, Mrs. H. L. Harvey, Miss Lizzie Echols and Miss G. A. Green possess the aptitude to teach successfully. The pupils are under the finest possible training. No punishment of any kind has had to be inflicted for four months! One of the pleasing incidents yesterday was the presentation of a gold pen and pencil to the Principal by Miss Rolly Moore in behalf of the school. The professor responded in a happy and felicitous manner.

Miss Rolly Moore recited the "Reply to the Conquered Banner," Miss Mattie Jones "Bingen on the Rhine," in fine style. The pupils in Miss Lizzie Echols' department, fourth grade evince remarkable progress.

STORR'S SCHOOL (COLORED.)

Miss A. Williams is the Principal assisted by Miss L. A. Kingman, Miss L. Stevenson, Mrs. L. C. Scudder, Miss S. Cooley and Miss E. J. Howe.

Miss Williams has the pupils under splendid discipline, and the evidence of improvement in the pupils is marked. The general exercises were the same as in the other Grammar schools. The reading spelling, black-board exercises, singing and elocution were fine. Indeed Storr's School is to be complimented for the progress exhibited in the several grades.

SUMMER HILL SCHOOL (COLORED).

Mrs L S Oldfield, the Principal, is an experienced teacher, and her assistants, Miss E W Coffin, Miss M Goulding and Miss L Fuller, fully sustain her in the excellent management of the school.

The same remarks apply to this school as to the Storr's.

Both of these schools are well conducted, and the pupils make fine progress.

THERE will be a meeting of the leading citizens of Atlanta to-night in the reading room of the H. I. Kimball House, to arrange for the Inaugural Ball. A general turnout is expected.

HIS CLOTHES.—We have read that—

Lord Chesterfield was a gay old fellow,
A gay old fellow was he;
He died on the twenty fourth of March,
In seventeen and seventy-three.
A splendid gotten up sort of man
From his hat to the tips of his toes;
But what he was chiefly famous for
Was the elegant style of his clothes.

Now we never saw Lord Chesterfield, but neither he or any other man of past generations, or of the present times, could get more beautiful clothes, better fitting clothes, better made clothes, or more desirable clothes in any respect than you can buy upon reasonable terms from Jerry Lynch, on Whitehall street.

SIDE WALKS AND PAVEMENTS.—So universal is the complaint coming to us from all sections of the city, relative to the miserable condition of our pavements and sidewalks, or rather in many instances a want of them, that we feel forced to put in a word. To-day there is not a street in the city throug which a pedestrian can go its entire length on account of mud and water, and on account of defective, or no sidewalks. Take Decatur, Marietta, Peachtree, Whitehall, Alabama, Hunter and Forsyth streets, and these are the prominent streets of Atlanta, and see the condition of the sidewalks on all of them. If they are impassible, what can be said of all the others? This is a bad state of thing, it is reflective, is wrong, and should be remedied. The natural drainage of Atlanta is generally good—and with but few exceptions, pleasant sidewalks could be easily made on all of our streets. We have been pleased to see that the city press agree that something is necessary to make better the side walks and condemn their condition. And we know that a large number of citizens are dissatisfied at the unpleasantness pedestrians are forced to in moving about the city. The action of the City Council in passing a law requiring citizens to make pavements wherever curbing was laid, was almost universally approved, the few exceptions being those who were able, yet unwilling to do anything for public benefit. If there has been any condemnation of the Council, it was that after making the law, they should have stood by and seen every street, and we believe every sidewalk dug down around the City Hall, where our courts meet, and where the future meetings of the Council are to be held, and yet not one foot of pavement of any kind has been laid on sidewalk or street by the City Hall. Let the law be enforced; let us have good passable sidewalks.

THE COURTS.

Fulton Superior Court—Malone Sentenced to be Hung—Settlement with Hoyt—Court Adjourns.

Judge Hopkins sentenced Milton Malone yesterday morning to be hung on the 24th day of January, 1873, as will be seen by the following order:

A verdict of guilty having been rendered in the case, it is considered and ordered that the defendant Milton Malone be removed from the bar of this court to the jail of Fulton county, and that he be there safely kept until Friday the 24th day of January, in the year 1873, and on that day, between the hours of ten in the forenoon and four in the afternoon, and within the yard of the county jail in the city of Atlanta and county of Fulton, that the Sheriff of Fulton county do then and there hang the defendant Milton Malone by the neck until he is dead.

The execution of this sentence shall be in private and witnessed only by the executing officer, a sufficient guard, the relations of the defendant and such clergymen and friends as he may desire.

Gen. Gartrell, his counsel, suggested to the Judge to withhold the sentence as he proposed to move for a new trial, and if the motion was refused to carry it to the Supreme Court. The Judge deemed it his duty to make the sentence and Malone was instructed to rise and receive it.

The Judge read the sentence slowly and deliberately, occasionally raising his eyes from the manuscript and gazing at the prisoner.

Malone stood up cool, collected and serene, listening to the dread sentence with the same calm, unsympathetic equanimity that he has displayed during the entire trial.

SETTLEMENT OF THE HOYT CASE.

The following proceedings explain fully the settlement of the several indictments against H. O. Hoyt, not tried:

State of Georgia vs. Henry O. Hoyt. Indictment for felony—verdict of guilty. April term, 1872.

State of Georgia vs. Henry O. Hoyt. Indictment for felony—fraudulent conversion of money entrusted to pay for wood. April term, 1872.

State of Georgia vs. Henry O. Hoyt. Indictment for felony—failing to pay money on demand. April term, 1872

State of Georgia vs. Henry O. Hoyt. Indictment for felony—fraudulent conversion of money to pay for timber and lumber. April term, 1872

It is agreed by Counsel for the State and defendant in the four above stated cases, and it is ordered by the Court that in the first stated case, which is being carried to the Supreme Court by the defendant, he be allowed to give bond in the sum of $5,000 to abide the final order, judgment and sentence in the same. In the two next stated cases he be permitted to give bond in the sum of $1,000 in each case for his personal appearance for trial in this Court on the same, and the fourth stated indictment for the fraudulent conversion of money entrusted for the purchase of timber and lumber be nol prossed, the Court being satisfied that no conviction could be had in the case.

WHO WILL CARE?

Who will care?
When we lie beneath the daisies
Underneath the churchyard mold,
And the long grass o'er our faces
Lays its fingers damp and cold;
When we sleep from care and sorrow
And the ills of earthly life;
Sleep to know no sad to-morrow,
With its bitterness and strife—
Who will care?

Who will care?
Who will come to weep above us,
Lying, O! so white and still,
Underneath the skies of summer,
When all nature's pulses thrill
To a new life, glad and tender,
Full of beauty rich and sweet,
And all the world is clad in splendor,
That the world should o'er repeat—
Who will care?

Who will care?
When Queen Autumn's flow'rs blossom,
And she stoops in pity down,
With a white flower for our bosom,
Taken from the royal crown?
Who will come to kneel in pity
By our long and narrow bed,
When the wild winds sing their dit'y
In the grasses o'er our head—
Who will care?

Who will care?
When the spring time's glad smile lingers
On the meadows far and wide,
And she drops with rosy fingers,
Bloom and leaf on every side,
Who will come with tender yearning
To the graves of those they miss?
Who will sigh for our returning
To their presence and their kiss?
Who will care?

Who will care?
Who will think of white hands lying
On a still and silent breast,
Never more to dream of sighing,
Evermore to think of rest?
Who will care? No one can tell us,
But if rest and peace be all,
Will it matter if they miss us
Or they miss us not at all?
Who will care?

London Clubs—Striking Features of Life in the British Metropolis.

The clubs and club-houses of London are among the most striking features of the great metropolis, whether considered in an architectural, a political, or a social point of view. They are unquestionably a power; and "what the club say" some times settles the fate of a ministry or the social standing of an individual. It is in them that the sociable qualities of the Englishman are shown to the greatest advantage, for they do not shine much in the domestic circle or at parties. Practically the two sexes live very much apart, although they are constantly meeting; that is to say, they do not develop their inner life to each other. The men do not talk business or politics with the women, and seldom venture on argument upon serious topics with them. In order to have conversation upon something more important than the opera, the court, the fashions, the last novel, party, picnic, or croquet match, the men resort to their "club." If they take interest in politics, they go to one of the political clubs; if they want congenial conversation, a game of whist or billiards, or to bet on a race, or to hear the latest news, they resort to one of the sociable clubs; and if they want free and easy talks with artists, actors, authors, journalists, and the like, they resort to the "Bohemian" clubs. The London clubs may thus be divided into three classes, the political, social, and free-and-easy. There are in all sixty-eight great clubs, supported by leading men, and about twenty minor ones, supported by men of a lower standing; but notwithstanding their number they are full, and it is sometimes difficult to obtain admission to membership. It is always so in those where the number of members is limited. The club-houses are clustered on a few streets—some of which are almost wholly devoted to them—such are Pall-Mall, Waterloo Place, and St. James street. There are no fewer than twenty-one on the last-named street, which is a short one; but the largest and the handsomest, in an architectural sense, are on Pall-Mall. In one point they are alike—that is, in providing the members with luxurious comforts, dinners and other meals, wines and liquors, cigars, and all the newspapers, magazines, and reviews of the day, at a little over cost price, together with the best attendance, and conveniences for bathing, dressing, and the like. The political clubs, like the Carlton, Junior Carlton, the Reform, are the most important. To one or other of these the members of both Houses of Parliament belong, and in each of them there is a telegraphic wire which communicates with the Houses, and the information thus obtained is supplemented by a half-hourly bulletin of the progress of the proceedings. These clubs are thus a species of lobby to the Parliament Houses. The selection of candidates for Parliament, the party manœuvering, the wire-pulling, is mainly done at these clubs.

The social or fashionable clubs are more exclusive in their character. Each has its particular "set," or he stands little chance of being elected a member. Poor men and those who are self-made are of small account in these clubs, where "blood" and wealth are the principal objects of veneration. Tradition is a power among them, especially at the most aristocratic and exclusive of all—viz: Brook's and White's; the former the resort of old Whigs, the latter of old Tories. They have flourished for more than a century. Arthur's and Boodle's have been the favorites of the young votaries of fashion, and the clubs connected with the army, navy, and universities are the resorts of gentlemen belonging to these establishments. But the knowing ones, who have studied life in various ways, and revolt at being chained to any particular set, assert that the clubs of the "Bohemians" of London are by far the most enjoyable. These are to be found in the less aristocratic streets, such as Henrietta street, Covent Garden, where is the Savage Club, the favorite resort of men connected with journalism and the stage. On the books of this club may be seen the names of some of the most eminent literary men and actors, such as Thackeray, Dickens, Jerrold, Lemon, Blanchard, Macready, Brooke, Artemus Ward, Swinburne, Maclice, etc. There they give free vent to their wit, and were wont to set the table in a roar. Every Saturday there is a 4 o'clock dinner, to which every member comes who can do so. The club has a formidable rival, however, in the Arundel, which is in Arundel street, Strand, and is a great resort of authors, actors, critics, managers, publishers, playwrights, and the like. Here there is a daily dinner at 5 o'clock, but the principal feature is its late supper, which begins when the theatres close, and ends when the editors of the morning papers have duly refreshed themselves, after closing their labors at 2 or 3 o'clock A. M. This is genuine "Bohemia," and at these suppers all the latest news, scandal, anecdotes, and jokes are retailed, songs are sung, and the mirth is fast and furious. Thackeray, Jerrold, and Dickens had a weakness for such resorts. The Arts Club, in Hanover Square, is the special resort of poets, where the conviviality is of a refined order, but tobacco reigns supreme and Bacchus is duly honored. The other noted "Bohemian" clubs are chiefly sustained by the theatrical profession, such are the Garrick Club, in Garrick street, and the Junior Garrick, in the Adelphia, and by gentlemen of literary and artistic tastes, as the Beaufort, the Westminster, the Portland, etc. There has been much discussion as to the tendency of clubs, but one of the manifest evils attendant on them is to weaken the love of home and the desire for marriage, and that ought to decide against them.

Hints About Walking.

Start off with the left foot in front, as in army practice. By doing so, when you advance there will be nothing left, and you will be right with "left in front." Don't expect to understand this at once.

Keep your eyes in front. If there are heads ahead of you, you can thus see ahead, and may avoid complications with strangers.

If you wish to ascertain the grade of the walk, place your feet down, and you will, if you are wise, know all about it. Man is a plantigrade animal. When you get hold of the earth with one foot, keep a hold until you get the other firmly fixed in a satisfactory place. By so doing you will feel all the stability contemplated in the Sunday Liquor law.

When you lift up you feet, let go of the dirt. It is not commendable to cling too much to earthly things, nor to walk off with what does not belong to you.

In learning to walk, always place one foot in advance of the other, alternating with left and right, for the sake of gracefulness in movement and ultimate advancement. Human advancement is often attained by the observance of this simple rule.

When you wish to stop do so. By observing this rule you will often avoid going too far.

By observing carefully these rules you will be able to get along without great difficulty.

THE PUREST AND SWEETEST COD-LIVER OIL is Hazard & Caswell's, made on the seashore, from fresh, selected livers, by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. MEDICAL BLUNDERS.—From the period when surgeons applied their salves to weapons instead of wounds to the present wide-awake age, the medical profession has unwittingly taken sides with Disease in its conflicts with the human system. Even yet, in spite of the teachings of centuries of experience, some physicians believe in depleting their patients, already seriously exhausted by sickness, with powerful evacuants, emetics, salivants' cantharidal plasters, or the lancet. But, providentially, public intelligence is ahead of these medical fossils, who belong, of right, to the era of the Crusades! That powerful ally of nature in its warfare with the causes of sickness, Hostetetter's Stomach Bitters, has opened the eyes of the masses to the paramount importance of increasing the vital strength of the body when menaced by disease. They understand that when the atmospheric condition are adverse to health—as, for example, in damp, chilly or severely cold weather—it is wise to reinforce the system with a wholesome tonic and stimulant, and thus enable it to combat and repel the depressing influence of an inclement temperature. If the constitutional and animal powers were always thus recruited in the presence of danger, the mortality from consumption, bronchitis, chronic rheumatism, &c., would be much less than it now is. The causes which produce croups, colds, quinsey, diptheria and catarrh seldom affect a strong and active vital system; and of all vitalizing preparations, Hostetter's Bitters has proven the most efficient. It is not claimed that this standard tonic is a specific for lung and throat maladies, as it is for dyspepsia, liver complaint and intermittents, but it is unhesitatingly asserted that it is the best known safeguard against all the atmospheric elements of disease. dec17-deod1w&w1t.

which is pronounced by the leading medical authorities of London and Paris "the most powerful tonic and alterative known to the medical world." This is no new and untried discovery but has been long used by the leading physicians of other countries with wonderful remedial results.
Don't weaken or impair the digestive organs by cathartics and physics, they give only temporary relief—indigestion, flatulency and dyspepsia with piles and kindred diseases are sure to follow their use.
Keep the blood pure and health is assured.
